ABOUT CCIS -- The California Consortium for Independent Study is a professional organization for educational providers serving students from kindergarten through high school in public school districts, county offices, and charter schools throughout the state. Because these educators work with students with wide interests and abilities, they need on-grade level, advanced, as well as remedial materials. Attendees are anxious to learn about any materials that would help them prepare their students for the high school exit examination, the new national Common Core Standards, meeting PE standards as well as anything pertaining to designing and delivering online courses. Schools have computer labs and/or computers in the classrooms and most school districts have also installed interactive technologies and software. Independent study is an alternative education option that has grown significantly over the past few years. Our annual north and south conferences have drawn between 300-450 attendees each.
